

CARLOS

Carlos is a community health worker supervisor, earning $60,000 annually.* Carlos works at a non-profit multi-service center in his neighborhood. His job includes conducting local outreach and building relationships with community members in order to connect them to health and mental health resources. He also supervises a group of community health workers and supports their professional growth. Carlos has 5 years of training and work experience in community health and mental health services.

Follow Carlos on his journey:

Carlos earns his GED while working as a cashier at a small business in his neighborhood. He earns $16/hr.

Carlos knows his community well and likes helping his neighbors. He enrolls in a 3-month Community Health Worker (CHW) training to enhance his ability to support his neighbors' well-being.

While in CHW training, Carlos continues working part-time as a cashier. Through the CHW program, he begins interning at a non-profit multi-service center and receives a $650 monthly stipend.

After completing his CHW training, Carlos is hired by the multi-service center as a Community Health Worker where he is able to act as a bridge between community members and the non-profit, connecting people to mental health and wellness services. Carlos earns $40,000 annually.

Carlos works as a CHW for 4 years, taking advantage of free professional development trainings offered by his employer in order to build his skills in project management, leadership, and technology. His salary increases as he gains experience.

Finally, Carlos is promoted to CHW supervisor, earning $60,000 annually.

*Salaries shown here are estimates. Actual salaries will vary based on factors including employer and the experience and credentials of the employee.
Design by The New School Trauma and Global Mental Health Lab